◆ A TRAGIC ANNIVERSARY FOR SCOUTING

If you've ever driven along U.S. 27 in Rhea County, you've probably seen the monument at White's Creek at the Rhea-Roane County line. You've probably also wondered why the monument is there. That monument marks a flash flood which claimed the lives of seven Boy Scouts and their scoutmaster on March 23, 1929. A Boy Scout troop from Rockwood was spending the weekend camping at a bungalow on White's Creek. There were 23 boys plus their leader. While they slept, a flash flood sent a wall of water down the creek. It swept their cabin away. Several of the scouts survived by riding the roof of the cabin down the creek until they were able to grab onto tree limbs and climb to safety. Sadly, the scoutmaster and seven of the scouts drowned. The monument was erected later to mark the Boy Scout Tragedy of 1929.

NATIONAL & WORLD NEWS

- ◆ Officials at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville have decided not to use state tax money or tuition funds to pay for the controversial "Sex Week" scheduled on the campus for next month. U.T. Chancellor Jimmy Cheek says he made the decision to pull the funding after reviewing the final agenda for the event. He says state money should not be used to promote some of the activities that are planned as part of "Sex Week". The event will go on, and will be allowed to use $6,700 in student fees.
- ◆ Due to possible crimes against humanity, The United Nations launched an investigation on Thursday into what it said were widespread and systematic human rights violations in North Korea. U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights, Navi Pillay, called for an international investigation into what she said may be crimes against humanity, including torture and executions of political prisoners in North Korean labor camps.
- ◆ On Tuesday, The House approved Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan's budget proposal. If implemented it would defund the federal health care law, balance the federal budget in 10 years and overhaul the nation's entitlement programs. The measure passed with 220 votes, just two more than it needed to pass.
