National & International News

◆ A plan was set in motion by the Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives which is expected to avert a federal government shutdown on October 1, but will bring another battle over President Obama's healthcare program. The battle will then begin over avoiding a first-ever government default on its debt. The government's authority to borrow more money expires around mid-October unless Congress increases the debt ceiling.

◆ The mother of the Navy Yard shooter, Cathleen Alexis, said that she does not know why her son opened fire at the Washington, D.C. Navy Yard, killing 12 people, but she is glad he can no longer hurt anyone else.

◆ A judge in Cocke County has ruled in a mother's favor after she appealed another judge's order to change her newborn son's name from "Messiah" to "Martin." The mother appealed and the second judge agreed with her. Jalessa Martin and the father of the boy could not agree on a last name, which is how they ended up in court in the first place last month. At that time, the judge ordered the 7-month-old boy's name to be "Martin." The judge said only Jesus Christ had the right to the name "Messiah." But, a judge on Wednesday over-ruled the original judge, and the boy can now be called Messiah.
